Limits governing the deductibility of automobile expenses and rates for benefits relating to the use of an automobile for 2010

On December 31, 2009, the Minister of Finance of Canada announced, in a news release,[1] that the various limits and rates governing the deductibility of automobile expenses and the calculation of the value of the taxable benefits relating to the use of an automobile that applied in 2009 will apply in 2010.

In this regard, in keeping with the principle of substantial harmonization of tax legislation regarding automobiles, the various limits and rates governing the deductibility of automobile expenses and the calculation of the value of the taxable benefits relating to the use of an automobile contained in Québec's tax legislation and regulations, will remain unchanged for 2010. These limits and rates are described in the appendix.

Limits governing the deductibility of automobile expenses and rates for benefits relating to the use of an automobile

Automobile expenses or value of certain taxable benefits	Limit or rate
Amount deductible from allowances paid by an employer to an employee according to distance travelled with his automobile:
– first 5 000 kilometres	As of January 1, 2010, the limit will remain at 52¢/km.[1]
– additional kilometres	As of January 1, 2010, the limit will remain at 46¢/km.[1]
Value of the benefit relating to operating expenses of an automobile that an employee uses for personal purposes, where the automobile is supplied by his employer:
– if the job consists mainly in selling or renting automobiles during the taxation year	As of January 1, 2010, the rate will remain at 21¢/km.
– in other cases	As of January 1, 2010, the rate will remain at 24¢/km.
Maximum capital cost of passenger vehicles for the purposes of the deduction for depreciation	For vehicles acquired after 2009, the maximum capital cost will remain at $30 000.[2]
Interest expenses eligible as a deduction	For vehicles acquired after 2009, the limit will remain at $300/month.
Leasing charges eligible as a deduction	For leases concluded after 2009, the limit will remain at $800/month.[2]

1 The limit will continue to be 4¢ higher per kilometre in Yukon, in the Northwest Territories and in Nunavut, to reflect the higher cost of maintaining and operating a vehicle in those territories. Accordingly, it will remain at 56¢ for the first 5 000 kilometres and at 50¢ for additional kilometres.

2 Before applicable sales taxes.
